“THE AMAZING ANTICS OF THE WOODLAND BOX TURTLE”

July 9, 2024

10:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m.

The Woodland Box Turtle is one of the most commonly encountered reptiles in Virginia. But, how much do you really know about them? Do you know that they can live as long as—and perhaps even longer than—humans, or that humans are the most important predators of Woodland Box Turtles, killing hundreds each year on Virginia’s highways? Join us as we learn about the life and antics of these amazing creatures!

Todd Fredericksen teaches courses in environmental science and biology at Ferrum College. Research interests include the effects of forest management on biodiversity, natural history and conservation of wildlife species in the Blue Ridge Mountains, and tropical and temperate forest ecology.

He is the editor of Banisteria, the journal of the Virginia Natural History Society and Editor of the journal Trees, Forests, and People. He is a wildland firefighter with the Virginia Department of Forestry and a member of the Virginia Natural History Society, Virginia Society for Ornithology, and the Virginia Herpetological Society.

Please join us for a great program and fellowship. Invite a friend!
